The bright blue spot in the center is due to x-radiation from gas around a giant black hole in the nucleus of the galaxy.

The twin dark cavities are coincident with the radio lobes.

The material around the rims has a temperature of about 30 million degrees compared to 70 million degrees for the outer part of the cluster. There is no evidence of a shock wave produced by the expansion of the radio lobes into the cool gas.

June 2000